WILLIS BEACH SURRENDERS TO THE AUTHORITIES

Gives Self Up to Capt. William Carter, of State Police

NOW LODGED IN JAIL

Prosecution Not Certain As To Whether Beach Will Testify Today

MAYS LANDING, N. J., Oct. 6 (I.N.S.)—Willis Beach, Vineland poultry dealer, sought on a warrant charging him with aiding and abetting in the murder of Dr. William Lillendahl near here, three weeks ago, today surrendered to Captain William Carter of the State Police here and was locked up in the Atlantic County Jail.

Prosecutor Louis I. Repetto said today he was not certain whether Beach would be called to testify before the grand jury, which will meet this afternoon to consider evidence in the case.

The prosecutor said he was equally uncertain whether Mrs. Margaret Lillendahl, widow of the slain man, would be called to testify today, although she has been subpoenaed.

Captain Carter and two other members of the State Police met Beach walking with his attorney, Edison Hedges, towards Mays Landing on the Veymouth Road.

After a brief conference between Carter and Hedges Beach was formally arrested on the warrant and taken to the county jail.

Beach had been missing for more than a week. State troopers and county detectives scoured the countryside for the elusive poultry dealer on a warrant issued soon after his disappearance from his Vineland home.

He disappeared on the day that three men from Morrisville, Pa., were to have faced him to say whether he was the man they saw driving a blue coupe out of Great Meadow near Hampton, soon after Dr. Lillendahl was shot and killed. Beach owns a blue coupe.

MAYS LANDING, N. J., Oct. 6 (I.N.S.)—The first definite legal move on the part of the state of New Jersey in the mystery of the murder of Dr. William Lillendahl is expected today when the case is presented to a special grand jury here.

According to Prosecutor S. Cameron Hinkle, the two indictments for murder will be returned. One of the indictments, he said, would be against Willis Beach, neighbor of the Lillendahls with whom Dr. Lillendahl was said to have quarreled and ordered from his home because of his friendship for his wife. Hinkle would not say against whom the other indictment would be directed.

Beach himself will be at the hearing today, according to his attorney, Edison Hedges. Beach disappeared shortly after his name became involved in the investigation. His counsel refused to divulge his whereabouts but promised to deliver him whenever Beach could aid the court in any way.

Philadelphia Motorist Reports Strange Incident

The incident occurred at about 10:30 and was reported to the Philadelphia police and also to Constable Thomas Crawford, Bristol Township. Crawford went to the scene and made an investigation.

BRISTOL A. A. TO PLAY AT DOYLESTOWN SUNDAY

Local Eleven Opposes County Seat Team in League Battle

TO PRACTICE TONIGHT

Bristol A. A. will travel to Doylestown on Sunday, where they will meet the county seat gridders in the opening game of Doylestown's home schedule in the Bucks-Montgomery Football League.

Bristol will oppose the Blue Sox, a different team than the squad that lost to Tacony. Coach Black had a heart to heart talk with the players last Tuesday night and with the determination that was shown and a few changes in the line-up the locals should bring home a victory.

The Doylestown squad has been bolstered with the addition of a few stars and should give Bristol the game of their lives.

The entire squad of the Bristol team is asked to be out tonight for practice and report promptly at the practice grounds behind the Delaware House at 7 o'clock.

In all probability the flood lights will be installed on Sullivan's Field by this evening, which will enable Coach Black to hold a stiff tackling practice there.

Descendant of William Tennent Unveils Monument to Founder Of Log College 200 Years Ago

Attending the Event Were Distinguished College Presidents And Other Educators and Religious Leaders — Dr. John G. Hibben Speaks

HARTSVILLE, Oct. 6.—On the site here, where 200 years ago her lineal ancestor, William Tennent, founded the Log College which is known as the cradle of Presbyterianism, Miss Mary A. Tennent, dean of the Women's College of Greensboro, N. C., Tuesday afternoon pulled the cord which unveiled a sturdy granite monument to her sturdy and distinguished ancestor, part of whose early home is almost directly opposite it, just a short distance from the intersection of the York and Street Roads.

Attending this significant celebration was probably one of the most distinguished gatherings of college presidents and other leaders in Presbyterianism and education ever assembled in Bucks County, among whom were Dr. John Grier Hibben, president of Princeton University; Dr. Henry van Dyke and President E. D. Warfield, Wilson College, who were the principal speakers. Assisting in this memorial event were many other men and women who were conspicuous in Presbyterian or educational movements.

In his introductory remarks in the afternoon Dr. VanDyke, who presided, said he was reminded by his surroundings of autumnal fragrance and of the good sense of the founders of the church in selecting a site by the side of a little river which would remind them of the passing years, and surrounded by great oaks which speak of the miraculous power of growth.

Speaking of the humbleness of Log College which paved the way for greater things, Dr. Hibben remarked that it is a good thing in this new age of bigness to have respect for the small things.

"We are dealing with men who use poison gas," declared Dr. John Grier Hibben, president of Princeton University in speaking of the attacks upon morality, religion and government by law, "and Christians who are fighting among themselves today over theological ideas must unite if these enemies are to be overcome." His subject was "Our Debt to Educational Pioneers."

Dr. Henry VanDyke, the chairman, in commenting later upon this condition, said he differed with Dr. Hibben to the extent of contending that these opponents "are not clever but merely smart."

"We are," he said, "in what might be called the smart Alec age; we believe in 'saying it with fire crackers'."

Dr. Hibben commented that he was saddened by the spectacle of certain sections of the church fighting over theological ideas, with differences which are only metaphysical.

Dr. Hibben, in opening his address, commented that Princeton University today represents the ripened fruit of the great enterprise started by Tennent.

"We like to think that Princeton sprang from Log College, but we have no formal proof of it. But it seems that there are connections. For instance the first trustees of Princeton, seven in number, elected five new members, four of whom were graduates of Log College. They were Gilbert Tennent, William Tennent, Jr., Samuel Blair and Samuel Finley. It is also significant that the year the College of New Jersey opened, in 1746, the door of Log College closed. We know we have from Log College the spirit of these men who controlled it 200 years ago. It is one of our most prized traditions. Their ideals were loyalty to church, school and state."

Embodiment these ideals, he said, 5,000 of Princeton's young men volunteered for the World War and 150 gave their lives. He expressed the conviction that the influence of the Log College men is still felt, quoting the statement that "The voice of conscience is the ancestral school speaking to us."

Problems of the present day, he continued, present a marked difference from those of 200 years ago. There is, he said, the tremendous difference between the world of knowledge today and that of 200 years ago. It has been growing in extent and profundity. One phase of it is shown in the idea of the tremendous value of the individual human life. The conception of the universe, he pointed out, is very different owing to the discoveries of science and invention. Yet, he said, scientists are still going on. One of the striking announcements made, he said, deals with the atom, now believed to be force surrounded by electron, so that it is declared that a single glass of water contains sufficient energy to drive a steamer from New York to Liverpool.

Dr. Hibben spoke at some length of the difference between the simplicity of life 200 years ago and the complexity of it today. The question, he said, is now to meet this complexity through simple living.

Christ's life, he said, may furnish an answer. His life, he said, was complex, but there exists, in explanation, one phrase: "He steadfastly set his face to go to Jerusalem." "We today," the speaker said, "must set our face steadfastly to go along the simple way."

Turning to the "insidious attacks" made today by writers and others upon morality, religion and government by laws, Dr. Hibben spoke of their insistence that there is no conscience, no distinction between right and wrong, no God, nothing to respect in law except the desire or passion of the moment.

It was here that Dr. Hibben regretted the disputes between certain sections of the church over theological ideas, and asserted that to overcome the enemies of morality, religion and government Christians must unite.

Continuing he said he believed there is a tremendous difference today in opportunities for service over those of 200 years ago. He spoke of missions and the societies of all churches for ministering to mankind. These things, he said, give tremendous opportunity for service by teachers of young people.

Here he contrasted the purpose of Tennent's school to educate young men for the ministry with the purposes of Log College. They were Gilbert Tennent, William Tennent, Jr., Samuel Blair and Samuel Finley.

With perfect weather prevailing the crowd today, early arrivals indicated, will surpass any Thursday in the history of the fair. This is "Doylestown Day" and "Big Thursday" combined, and there is no getting away from it, the fair grounds looked like a "Big Day" this morning.

"United States Navy Day" is what yesterday was termed by the fair officials. Although the fair is but five years old, it was regarded important enough for a high official of the United States Navy to accept an invitation to visit the fair from the air.

And how was it done? Well, as one fair patron said yesterday, "it was put across with bells on."

Shortly before noon yesterday there appeared upon the eastern horizon, the giant U. S. Navy dirigible, "Los Angeles." The big ship left Lakehurst yesterday morning on a trial run and because Horace E. Wilgus, of Philadelphia, vice-president of the Doylestown Fair, had invited Commander M. R. Pierce, executive officer of the Lakehurst Naval Air Station, to fly over the fair grounds if possible, the Commander favored the fair patrons with an unusual opportunity.

Three times the big dirigible encircled the fair grounds and the town. (Continued on Page Six)

MR. AND MRS. PAPPALIAN BACK FROM LONG TOUR

Bristol Couple Have Spent Two and One-Half Years in Greece

NOTICE MANY CHANGES

The S. S. Olympic, arriving in New York harbor from Cherbourg, last night, had among its passengers Mr. and Mrs. Basil Pappajian, of Mill street, Bristol.

Mr. and Mrs. Pappajian have spent the past two and one-half years in their native country, Greece. While in Janna, Mr. Pappajian's home town years ago, he participated in the dedication exercises of the public school building, which was presented to the town on behalf of the Bristolian.

In this school there will be approximately 84 scholars taking up grade subjects. The school was opened on the 15th of last month. Mr. Pappajian likewise was the donor of a Greek and an American flag, which have been placed in the building. Ten months were enjoyed in the town of Janna.

In speaking of the change in various conditions in Greece, Mr. Pappajian today told of the manner of dress. Natives of that European country are attired about the same as Americans. Many are the buildings that have been erected during the past few years, since the war, and the Bristolian told likewise of the many other changes noticed since that world conflict. Great strides have been made in business, and many Americans are to be found in that section.

American money is more readily accepted, and has greater worth there than any other form of coin. A most excellent dinner, complete with dessert and liquid refreshments, can be had for 23 cents in American money. Americans are treated with great courtesy and privileges more readily granted them than people of other nationalities visiting Greece, Mr. Pappajian remarked.

The schools have likewise grown in number since the war, and there is now being built a large American college in Athens, which will care for many desiring to pursue higher studies.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Pappajian were highly pleased with conditions as found in the country which gave them birth, and referred with pleasure to the manner in which both business, schools, etc., are advancing.

The climate is quite different than that experienced here, as in the Summer it is quite torrid, with little rain. Occasionally snow is to be seen in the Wintertime, but this is very seldom.

After leaving Greece, the Bristolians spent three days in Italy and six days in France, enjoying the sights. Most of the traveling in Greece is done by horse and carriage, although in the larger cities automobiles are used to a great extent.

ACT SHOOTING AFFAIR AT P. R. R. STATION HERE

PHOTOGRAPHS TAKEN

The McCole-DeMarcus scuffle at the P. R. R. passenger station, the night of September 25th, which culminated in McCole being shot by DeMarcus, it is alleged, with a .32 short, was reenacted yesterday afternoon.

The setting for the enactment of this drama was that patch of grass east of the railroad embankment extending from the main waiting room on the east side to Beaver street and bounded on the other side by the vehicular driveway.

The actors were William A. Brady, eye-witness of the real tragedy, and driver of Fine's taxi-cab; David ("Reds") Waters, impersonating DeMarcus; J. D. Kent, pinch-hitting as assistant baggage-agent for McCole, representing McCole; Sergeant of Railroad Police Thomas Tanner, representing Police Officer Phillips.

As the quartette posed and acted as the real scuffle is supposed to have taken place, a photographer squeezed the rubber bulb and "shot" the scene. The pictures are to be produced in Court and will be used to substantiate the testimony given by witnesses for the prosecution.

The alleged exact spots on which McCole and DeMarcus wrestled when first seen by Brady, as he drove his taxi out of the station driveway, were first marked with large pieces of cardboard by Sergeant Tanner, and the positions allocated to the actors were grouped around this center sitting.

Automobiles were pushed and towed from the driveway and two exterior "shots" were made by Photographer Nichols, perched up alongside of track No. 1 on the elevated.

"Reds" Waters and Kent then posed on the center position, Kent leaning over as if grasping at his hat, and Waters with a pistol aimed and cocked as DeMarcus is alleged to have stood. Waters snapped the trigger and then he and Kent went into a clinch.

At this point Brady drives up, stops his cab, leaps out and runs around the rear, retraces his steps, grabs a jack from beneath the front seat of his machine and starts for Waters. Brady drops his jack and with Kent clinches with Waters and the three tussle for possession of the gun, Brady having Waters around the neck and pulling upward on his nose, while Kent puts all his strength at holding the wrist of the hand which has the gun.

The three break and run toward the embankment, a distance of about 29 feet, where they again clinch. Here Tanner enters the scene and wrenches the pistol from the hand of Waters and the camera takes its last "shot."

Distances and locations are marked and numerous views taken of the vicinity, all to be produced in court when the case comes up for trial at the December term, providing McCole has sufficiently recovered to appear.

EMILIE MAN GETS JAIL SENTENCE AND FINE FROM COURT

Fred Squance Pleads Guilty To Charge of Drunken Auto Driving

ARRESTED IN BRISTOL

Three Youths Arrested Here Are Given Into Custody Of Their Parents

DOYLESTOWN, Oct. 6.—Miscellaneous business was disposed of in court Tuesday before Judge William C. Ryan. In the court of Quarter Sessions a petition for parole was presented in behalf of William Clapper-ton, who on September 12 was sentenced to pay a fine of $200 and costs and serve three months in the Bucks County Prison for operating his automobile while drunk. There will be a hearing in the case at a later date.

What action will be taken on parole petitions for drunken drivers is a matter of discussion. It was intimated at the recent term of criminal court when over twenty drunken drivers were on the list for trial that sentences would be "impressive." Yesterday it was the opinion of many expressed about the Court House that paroles in drunken driver cases will be refused.

Paul Kernechel, of near Quakertown, pleaded guilty yesterday to the theft of two watches stolen from school teachers while they were in swimming. Judge Ryan sentenced Kernechel to serve not less than four nor more than eight months on one charge and to serve four months on the other at the expiration of the first sentence.

Fred Squance, of Emilie, pleaded guilty to operating an automobile while drunk and was sentenced to three months in the Bucks County Prison and fined $200 and costs. Squance was arrested in Bristol by police of the borough.

Upon the promise they would be "better boys" and would be "looked after" in the future, Judge Ryan returned three youths arrested in Bristol, to the custody of their parents. The boys, Alfred Market, Eugene Marone and Emidy Farde, were before the juvenile court on a charge of larceny.

In the case of Commonwealth against Howard Sandt, an attachment was issued for him for his failure to carry out the order of the court in a desertion and non-support case.

Lewis Kachinski, of Neshaminy, before Judge Ryan on a charge of non-support was directed to pay his wife $3 a week toward the support of a child.

Exception were filed in the court of Quarter Sessions by the supervisors of Middletown township against the report of the viewers in reference to the opening of a road in Middletown township.

Bristol High Expects To Defeat Mt. Holly Tomorrow

Bristol High will face much stiffer opponents when it meets Mount Holly High School tomorrow at 3:45 p. m., at Bristol high school field, than it had in its second game with Berwyn, whom it defeated 6-0.

Mount Holly defeated Bristol last year 7-6, and expects to repeat the victory tomorrow.

Coach Townsend has had his boys in training all week and every one feels in good shape for a good and stiff battle.

Coach Townsend will start Carnival at centre, because "Rex" Young has left the team. Winslow and Satterthwaite will likely start at guard, but Harvison showed great stuff in last week's battle and it is likely that he will see action before the game is over.

De Risi and Shiffer will start at the tackle position as both played very good in the opening two games. Opdyke and Earle will probably be the backs, but a last minute change will put Wright at end and Earle in the backfield.

"Les" Strumfels' injured ankle has healed so he and Spadacino, who has been calling signals, Slatoff and "Rus" Arrison will be in the backfield.

Friday night a sedan owned by Herbert Phelps, Cedar avenue, Croydon, was stolen from in front of his residence.

IMMIGRATION PROBLEMS

Unforeseen kinks in the immigration regulation law passed by congress in 1924 continue to crop up. The uproarious "moral turpitude" case raised one of them. Another is the ruling, under a strict construction of the law, that an American-born woman married to an alien admitted on a visitor's permit can be deported.

Fortunately, the commissioner of immigration has had the good sense to say that he does not believe that any American-born woman will ever be deported under the law. How he proposes to translate his belief into a permanent rule is not clear. The presumption is that their visas will be renewed indefinitely.

Few, if any, laws are foolproof. Owing to the highly complicated human relationships which enter into the restriction of immigration, it has presented more than the usual number of unforeseen cases of individual hardship or injustice. Put immigration authorities have usually made a humane interpretation when it has been possible for them to do so without going counter to the expressed intention of the law, and without establishing precedents that might undermine its efficacy and usefulness in the future.

When the next congress turns its attention to the un-American plan to register all aliens legally here and deport those denied registration let it consider the welfare of the immigrant as well as the comfort and safety of the native. Americans do not want it said that they have profited from the sufferings of others.

Since the human element is so inextricably involved in immigration regulation it is incumbent upon congress to be humane.

MORE AIR FIELDS NEEDED

Behind the front line of experimentation which made possible the flights across the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, America is preparing for less spectacular but highly important developments in aviation. That work is not only going on in many factories which are rapidly turning out planes to meet an ever-increasing demand. It is in evidence in hundreds of cities and towns where public and private interests are building fields, hangars and shops for air fleets of the future.

More than 4,000 airports already dot the American landscape. They are scattered over every state in the Union. They are awaiting the winged carriers which are not held back by the ancient hazards of forests, mountains, streams and deserts.

While the majority of these airports are private commercial ventures, 207 cities have municipal fields completed or under construction and more than a hundred others have them under consideration.

The preliminary list of about 1,000 of the more important airports shows that, with one exception, the larger cities have not displayed marked initiative in building municipal fields. Chicago has seven civic airports and those of the other large cities that have even one airport have no numerical advantage over hundreds of small cities and towns which have demonstrated their progressiveness by providing flying fields.

American cities should prepare for the development of commercial aviation. The 4,000 fields scattered over the forty-eight states represent a step forward, but they are scarcely adequate for transient flying and for preliminary ventures.

SYNOPSIS

It is the summer of 1896; Hank Armstrong has won the Maple City races with his mare, Sloe Eyes. His son, Bob, takes no interest in horses, but is secretly inventing gasoline engines, and openly courted the mayor's daughter, Rose. One evening when Bob and Rose are in the drug store Steve Bentley, just returned from the city, makes advances to the girl and Bob quarrels with him. Later that night while Bob is gaining Rose's forgiveness for his dispute with Steve, Hank is fighting a losing fight for the life of Sloe Eyes. The mare dies, leaving a three day old colt.

She had told him she didn't like his rival. Well, that was something. He hoped she meant it. But Rose didn't lie. He knew that. Why, then, had he played at childish games to get her back as he could remember he had carried her books home from school for her. And he had fought for her. When the boys pulled her long brown curls he had licked them good and plenty out in the schoolyard. And now—now if he could only convince his father that someday in this mad, prancing gallop of progress there would come machines such as had never been dreamed of in Maple City he would be happy.

In other cities, he knew, people were working, experimenting with these things. There was a man out there in Detroit by the name of Henry Ford who had tried out a car that actually ran a short distance. True, it had stopped because of a minor accident—the nut of a bolt had come off. And there were vibrations to contend with—probably the same vibrations that have been handed down to the present day cars. And Haynes, the great Elwood Haynes, had swept out in a car run by a gasoline engine, going at the terrific rate of eight miles an hour.

Haynes, just a few years ago, had been the field superintendent of a natural gas company in Kokomo, Indiana. Bob reflected. And the rough roads around caused him to lose so much time in his horse and buggy trips that he began a study of the possibilities of steam, electricity and gasoline. He had finally purchased a small gasoline engine, and had set it up on blocks and started it. The vibration was excessive, it was true, but it was no worse than the jolts of buggy riding. He took his sketches to Elmer Apperson, who had a small machine shop in Kokomo. The automobile was made, and in 1894 Haynes, before a crowd of admiring townsfolk, had stepped into his horseless carriage, taken hold of the steering rod, and dashed down the road. And that was the Haynes who was coming to Rose's house to lecture tomorrow night.

Perhaps he might have an opportunity to talk to this man, Bob was thinking to himself. He must make the opportunity. If he could only get a start some place, building cars and maybe even racing them. For surely, if they raced, horses they would race these horseless carriages. He didn't quite know what his father felt that nothing could displace the horse. Well, horses would probably be always about, but a machine—Ah, there was a real beauty. To feel the throb of a machine beneath you. Bob liked horses. It wasn't that, he told himself. But racing horses gave him little thrill or pleasure. He was young—the new generation. Tolerant of every new invention, as were nearly all American of his day. It was an age of experiment, of try-outs. Why not welcome everything that would come to be a feature in the world of science. He did not feel unkindly toward his father for the older man's lack of tolerance. He could understand the love his father bore for his horses. But for himself—his love was a panting, purring, pulsing machine.

Bob did not realize, with the unsentimentality of youth, how much it hurt his father to see his boy turning from the greatest thing in his own life—horses. Bob hadn't meant to hurt his father by staying away from the races and the celebrations. But he would so much rather sit at home and puzzle over his ideas for inventions of machines. That was his work—racing horses was his father's. He had never had any words with the older man about his interest in machinery, but he had heard his father say enough against the new inventions to realize how hard it would be to make him understand. But perhaps—perhaps, after tomorrow night, when his father had heard the great Haynes talk, and had seen the demonstrations of an auto, he might come to be more tolerant. And so, dreaming happily, Bob walked up the front steps of the two story frame house with the ornate gables and scroll decorations of the town. He opened the front door, still thinking of Rose and the horseless carriage. As he stepped into the hallway Mammy, dressed for bed, her hair tied up in a cotton handkerchief, stuck her head out of a rear door. Bob wondered why Mammy was up at this hour of the night, and he called down the hall.

"Bad home yet?" he questioned. Mammy shook her head. "He down to de stable a wrestlin' with a sick boss," responded the aged negress.

"Gee, that's too bad," Bob exclaimed, accepting the answer as the reason for Mammy's being up so late.

He turned, calling a "Good night" to Mammy, and started up the stairs one at a time, pulling himself along by the bannister. Already his thoughts had returned to Rose, and smiling happily he hummed a little tune as he got ready for bed.

It was not until several hours later that Hank returned from his unsuccessful vigil kept at the side of his dying horse. He turned wearily up the path to his own front porch and opened the door—a sorrowful contrast to the blithe, young figure that had stepped over the threshold just before him that evening. The hall was dark, but long accustomed to the lay-out of his home, the horse-fancier, his head drooping, made his way up the stairs and started down the dimly lighted hallway toward his son's room. He opened the door and a stream of light from the corridor thrust itself into the room and across the old four-poster bed where Bob lay peacefully sleeping.

As the light penetrated the room the boy rolled over, half awakened. Dimly he made out the figure of his father, outlined against the light, with coat and overcoat still on his arm, dripping rain.

"Hello, dad!" Bob rubbed his eyes sleepily. Then he noticed the bedraggled appearance of the older man. "What's the matter? You look pale as a ghost."

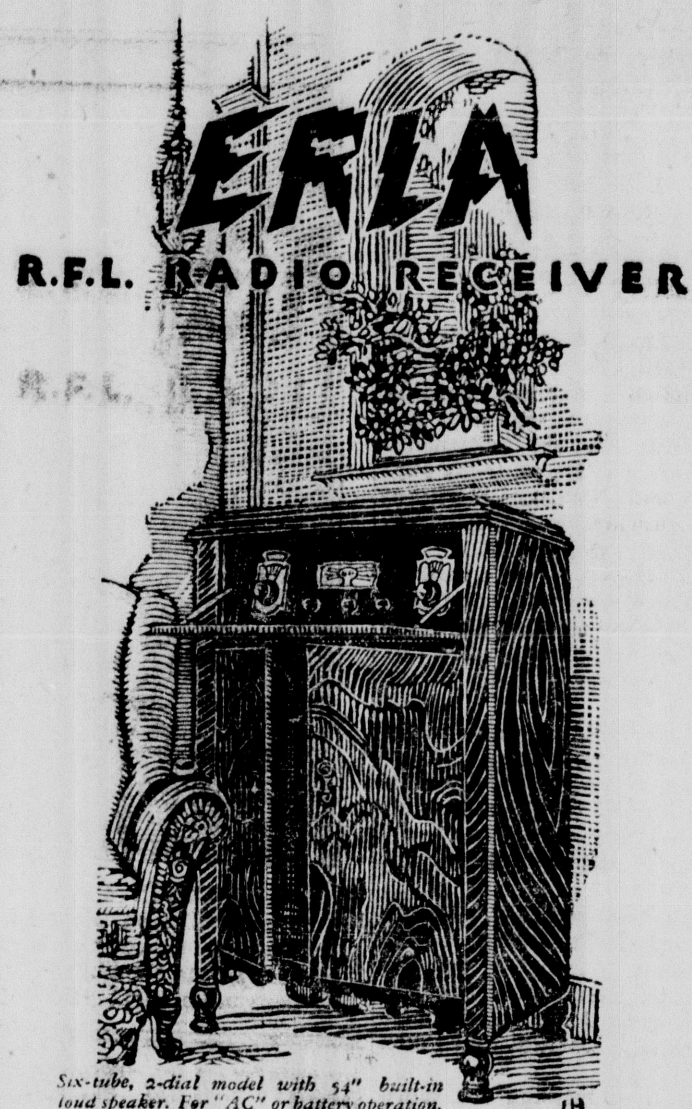

"Sloe Eyes is dead!" Hank's head was bowed. He couldn't allow the boy to see the tears that glistened in his eyes.

Bob stared at his father and shook his head. He didn't know what to say, yet he felt as though something should be said. It must have hit the old man pretty hard all right, he thought. "Gee, that's a shame!" It was all Bob could muster. He lay for a moment gazing at his father, and then rolled over again, turning his face from the light.

Hank raised his head, but the death of his mare had cut so deeply into his heart that there was no room for another ache. Yet all he had wanted was a little sympathy, a friendly pat on the back, a shoulder to lean on in his adversity. He felt weak, old, as though he could no longer stand by himself. But the cruelty of non-understanding youth is an unconscious cruelty. The hands that have bandaged cut fingers and toes for many long, weary years, so often reach out into a blank void, groping in the darkness for a hand to help them along the way, and in vain. Youth doesn't mean it, but youth will be served—and it forgets so easily.

Bob's casual manner hurt his father. Sloe Eyes, his own Sloe Eyes, gone. He sighed despondently and went out into the hall again, towards his own room. Once there he struck a match and lighted the oil lamp, put the chimney on it and set it down on the black walnut wash stand. He threw his coat over the back of a rocking chair, picked up the lamp and went to the head of his bed, over which hung a painting of Sloe Eyes—a picture of a thoroughbred with head erect and muscles tense. He placed the lamp on the table beside the bed and sat down on the edge of the four poster. He tried to unlace his shoes, but his fingers fumbled with the strings and his unseeing, tear-dimmed eyes could not find the damp knots.

Teach Them To Save

No lesson the child can learn is more important than that. The boy or girl who learns early to save will form thrift habits of value.

You know the saving you did during the war and the liberty bonds you bought. There is no reason why you should not do this every month and every year.

Due to the never failing power of compound interest and compound earnings, you and your children can grow to positions of wealth and independence.

Our stockholders take shares for investment; to save for the education of their children; to buy a home later on; to have money to care for them as they grow older. Most shareholders pay from five to ten dollars per month. Some pay as high as Two Hundred Dollars per month.

IMMIGRATION PROBLEMS

Unforeseen kinks in the immigration regulation law passed by congress in 1924 continue to crop up. The uproarious "moral turpitude" case raised one of them. Another is the ruling, under a strict construction of the law, that an American-born woman married to an alien admitted on a visitor's permit can be deported.

Fortunately, the commissioner of immigration has had the good sense to say that he does not believe that any American-born woman will ever be deported under the law. How he proposes to translate his belief into a permanent rule is not clear. The presumption is that their visas will be renewed indefinitely.

Few, if any, laws are foolproof. Owing to the highly complicated human relationships which enter into the restriction of immigration, it has presented more than the usual number of unforeseen cases of individual hardship or injustice. But immigration authorities have usually made a humane interpretation when it has been possible for them to do so without going counter to the expressed intention of the law, and without establishing precedents that might undermine its efficacy and usefulness in the future.

When the next congress turns its attention to the un-American plan to register all aliens legally here and deport those denied registration let it consider the welfare of the immigrant as well as the comfort and safety of the native. Americans do not want it said that they have profited from the sufferings of others.

Since the human element is so inextricably involved in immigration regulation it is incumbent upon congress to be humane.

MORE AIR FIELDS NEEDED

Behind the front line of experimentation which made possible the flights across the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, America is preparing for less spectacular but highly important developments in aviation. That work is not only going on in many factories which are rapidly turning out planes to meet an ever-increasing demand. It is in evidence in hundreds of cities and towns where public and private interests are building fields, hangars and shops for air fleets of the future.

More than 4,000 airports already dot the American landscape. They are scattered over every state in the Union. They are awaiting the winged carriers which are not held back by the ancient hazards of forests, mountains, streams and deserts.

While the majority of these airports are private commercial ventures, 207 cities have municipal fields completed or under construction and more than a hundred others have them under consideration.

The preliminary list of about 1,000 of the more important airports shows that, with one exception, the larger cities have not displayed marked initiative in building municipal fields. Chicago has seven civic airports and those of the other large cities that have even one airport have no numerical advantage over hundreds of small cities and towns which have demonstrated their progressiveness by providing flying fields.

American cities should prepare for the development of commercial aviation. The 4,000 fields scattered over the forty-eight states represent a step forward, but they are scarcely adequate for transient flying and for preliminary ventures.

SYNOPSIS

It is the summer of 1896; Hank Armstrong has won the Maple City race with his mare, Sloe Eyes. His son, Bob, takes no interest in horses, but is secretly tinkering with gasoline engines, and openly courting the Mayor's daughter, Rose, one evening when Bob and Rose are in the drug store Steve Bentley, just returned from the city, makes advances to the girl and Bob quarrels with him. Later that night while Rose is taking Rose's forgiveness for his dispute with Steve, Hank is fighting a losing fight for the life of Sloe Eyes. The mare dies, leaving a three day old colt.

She had told him she didn't like his rival. Well, that was something. He hoped she meant it. But Rose didn't lie. He knew that. Why, they had played at childish games together, grown up together. As far back as he could remember he had carried her books home from school for her. And he had fought for her. When the boys pulled her long brown curls he had licked them good and plenty out in the schoolyard. And now—now if he could only convince his father that someday in this mad, prancing gallop of progress there would come machines such as had never been dreamed of in Maple City he would be happy.

In other cities, he knew, people were working, experimenting with these things. There was a man out there in Detroit by the name of Henry Ford who had tried out a car that actually ran a short distance. True, it had stopped because of a minor accident—the out of a bolt had come off. And there were vibrations to contend with—probably the same vibrations that have been handed down to the present day cars. And Hank, the great Elwood Haynes, had swept off in a car run by a gasoline engine, going at the terrific rate of eight miles an hour.

Haynes, just a few years ago, had been the field superintendent of a natural gas company in Kokomo, Indiana. Bob reflected. And the rough roads around caused him to lose so much time in his horse and buggy trips that he began a study of the possibilities of steam, electricity and gasoline. He had finally purchased a small gasoline engine, and had set it up on blocks and started it. The vibration was excessive, it was true, but it was no worse than the jolts of buggy riding. He took his sketches to Elmer Apperson, who had a small machine shop in Kokomo. The automobile was made, and in 1894 Haynes, before a crowd of admiring townfolk, had stepped into his horseless carriage, taken hold of the steering rod, and dashed down the road. And that was the Haynes who was coming to Rose's house to lecture tomorrow night.

Perhaps he might have an opportunity to talk to this man, Bob was thinking to himself. He must make the opportunity. If he could only get a start some place, building cars—and maybe even racing them. For surely, if they raced horses they would race these horseless carriages. He didn't quite know what his father would say to the idea. His father felt that nothing could displace the horse. Well, horses would probably be always about, but a machine—Ah, there was a real beauty. To feel the throb of a machine beneath you. Bob liked horses. It wasn't that, he told himself. But racing horses gave him little thrill or pleasure. He was young—the new generation. Tolerant of every new invention, as were nearly all Americans of his day. It was an age of experiment, of try-outs. Why not welcome everything that would come to be a feature in the world of science. He did not feel unkindly toward his father for the older man's lack of tolerance. He could understand the love his father bore for his horses. But for himself—his love was a panting, purring, pulsating machine.

unsentimentality of youth, how much it hurt his father to see his boy turning from the greatest thing in his own life—horses. Bob hadn't meant to hurt his father by staying away from the races and the celebrations. But he would so much rather sit at home and puzzle over his ideas for inventions of machines. That was his work—racing horses was his father's. He had never had any words with the older man about his interest in machinery, but he had heard his father say enough against the new inventions to realize how hard it would be to make him understand. But perhaps—perhaps, after tomorrow night, when his father had heard the great Haynes talk, and had seen the demonstrations of an auto, he might come to be more tolerant.

And so, dreaming happily, Bob walked up the front steps of the two-story frame house with the ornate jig-saw scroll decorations that constituted the Armstrong home and one of the showplaces of the town. He opened the front door, still thinking of Rose and the horseless carriage. As he stepped into the hallway Mammy, dressed for bed, her hair tied up in a cotton handkerchief, stuck her head out of a rear door. Bob wondered why Mammy was up at this hour of the night, and he called down the hall.

"Dad home yet?" he questioned. Mammy shook her head. "He down to de stables a wrestlin' with a sick boss," responded the aged negress.

"Gee, that's too bad," Bob exclaimed, accepting the answer as the reason for Mammy's being up so late.

He turned, calling a "Good night" to Mammy, and started up the stairs one at a time, pulling himself along by the bannister. Already his thoughts had returned to Rose, and smiling happily he hummed a little tune as he got ready for bed.

It was not until several hours later that Hank returned from his unsuccessful vigil kept at the side of his dying horse. He turned wearily up the path to his own front porch and opened the door—a sorrowful contrast to the blithe, young figure that had stepped over the threshold just before him that evening. The hall was dark, but long accustomed to the lay-out of his home, the horse-fancier, his head drooping, made his way up the stairs and started down the dimly lighted hallway toward his son's room. He opened the door and a stream of light from the corridor thrust itself into the room and across the old four-poster bed where Bob lay peacefully sleeping. As the light penetrated the room the boy rolled over, half awakened. Dimly he made out the figure of his father, outlined against the light, with coat and overcoat still on his arm, dripping rain.

"Hello, dad!" Bob rubbed his eyes sleepily. Then he noticed the bedraggled appearance of the older man. "What's the matter? You look pale as a ghost."

"Sloe Eyes is dead!" Hank's head was bowed. He couldn't allow the boy to see the tears that glistened in his eyes.

Bob stared at his father and shook his head. He didn't know quite what to say, yet he felt as though something should be said. It must have hit the old man pretty hard all right, he thought.

"Gee, that's a shame!" It was all Bob could muster. He lay for a moment gazing at his father, and then rolled over again, turning his face from the light. Hank raised his head, but the death of his mare had cut so deeply into his heart that there was no room for another ache. Yet all he had wanted was a little sympathy, a friendly pat on the back, a shoulder to lean on in his adversity. He felt weak, old, as though he could no longer stand by himself. But the cruelty of non-understanding youth is an unconscious cruelty. The hands that have bandaged cut fingers and toes for many long, weary years, so often reach out into a blank void, groping in the darkness for a hand to help them along the way, and find only cold, unfeeling fingers.

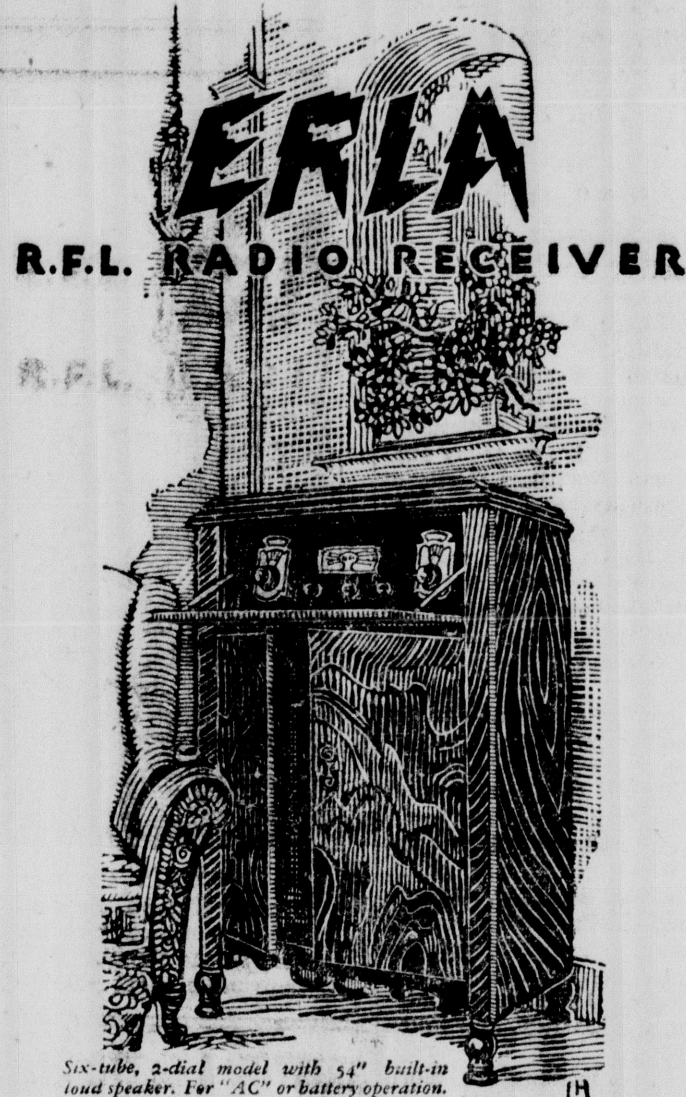

Bob's casual manner hurt his father. Sloe Eyes, his own Sloe Eyes, gone. He sighed despondently and went out into the hall again, towards his own room. Once there he struck a match and lighted the oil lamp, put the chimney on it and set it down on the black walnut wash stand. He threw his coat over the back of a rocking chair, picked up the lamp and went to the head of his bed, over which hung a painting of Sloe Eyes—a picture of a thoroughbred with head erect and muscles tense. He placed the lamp on the table beside the bed and sat down on the edge of the four poster. He tried to unlace his shoes, but his fingers fumbled with the strings and his unseeing, tear-dimmed eyes could not find the damp knots.

A towel salesman who never overlooked a hot spot overnight in a small town hotel and was surprised to find a dirty roller towel in the washroom. Indignantly he said to the landlady: "Don't you know that it has been against the law for years to put up a roller towel in this state?"

"Sure, I know it," replied the proprietor. "But no ex post facto law goes and that towel was put up before the law was passed."

"I heard you refused a job of president of the company."

"Yeh, there was no chance of advancement."

"You wish to marry my daughter? Can you cook, sew, wash, and iron, sweep, darn, nurse children, shop—?"

The young man gave a puzzled laugh. "Why do you ask if I can do these things?" he said.

"Because," said the elderly man, "my daughter can't."

She was only a dressmaker's daughter; sew she would.

Wife—I can; but tell your story.

"Why," asked the druggist, "do you object to taking brick cream?"

"Shure," replied Pat O'Hara, "a brick to me is something to be thrown, not eaten."

"Are kings and queens always good, father?" asked the romantic daughter, looking up from her history book.

"They are not!" snorted her practical parent. "Nine out of ten you'll find three treys out against them."

In loving memory of our son, George M. Roberts, Co. D, 312th Machine Gun Battalion, who died in France, October 6, 1918.

Had but I got the last fond look
Into his loving face,
Oh, had I only got the chance
To kneel down in that place—
To have held your hand, dear George,
While your young life ebbed away—
My heart would not have felt so much
The tears I shed today.
But when my heart is vacant,
I seem to hear you say:
"Keep up your heart, dear Mother;
We will meet again, some day."
Sadly missed by
FATHER and MOTHER. 10-6-1t

Watch Your Kidneys!

To Be Well See That They Function Properly.

YOUR kidneys! Do you realize what an important part they play in your health and length of life? Your kidneys are the blood filters. When they act sluggishly, waste poisons remain in the blood and make one tired and drowsy, with often nagging backache, annoying headache and dizzy spells. That the kidneys are not acting right is often shown by scanty or burning excretions. Assist the kidneys with a stimulant diuretic. Use Doan's Pills. Doan's are endorsed the country over. Ask your neighbor!

on the stock market. I warned him not to touch the principal, but to use only the dividends. In May he told me he lost all the money and pleaded with me not to do anything, as he would pay me back. I couldn't do anything because I had so much faith in him."
The aged woman declared that her nephew had taken her into his home after she had inherited the money but had turned her out when the funds were gone. "I tried to work," she said, "but I am too old."
McCullough did not testify at the hearing at Philadelphia. Bank officers testified that he had made many trips to the safety deposit vault in which his aunt's funds were placed. He entered the restaurant business some time ago, and failed in that venture.

Big Airships Thrill Doylestown Fair

flying low. An hour later the Navy observation balloon, "J-4" from Lakehurst, appeared on the scene and maneuvered over the fair grounds for thirty minutes, flying very low. The Los Angeles never appeared against a clearer sky and the sight was a beautiful one.
Nothing but the highest praise has been heard everywhere concerning the fair exhibits this year. They surpass anything ever dreamed of in this section of the state. Yesterday the secretary of the Hagerstown Fair, Maryland, paid an official visit to the fair and expressed amazement with the wonderful exhibition in five short years of growth.
Judging in many of the classes was completed yesterday. The horse show will be held Friday and it will be a real one, according to advance dope.
Racing yesterday thrilled the fans. Every available inch of space in the grandstand was sold out early and the same condition is true for today's events.
Last night was Rotary-Kiwanis night at the fair grounds. The two clubs of Doylestown held a joint meeting in the Friendship Thimble Social dining room.
The Red Cross movies in the Red Cross tent are attracting many of the kiddies. It is a real treat for them. The Red Cross is demonstrating actual health lessons in these pictures and is showing on the screen the work that is being accomplished in Bucks County. The health tent nearby is filled with many good things to see. The Red Cross dental car was on the grounds yesterday and the Bucks County Tuberculosis Society was also on hand with an exhibit in the health tent.
The list of awards as placed in the classes judged yesterday are as follows:
African daisies: 1st, Mrs. J. F. Gaskill, Mechanicsville.

Descendant of William Tennent Unveils Monument To Founder of Log College

pose of many institutions today to train young men merely to go out and make money.
"We should remember," he said, "that every one is called to do something of enduring value to his generation. I like the expression by Roosevelt, 'Do what you can.'"
One of the striking features of the afternoon was an historical ode, written by Dr. John H. Finley, of New York, and effectively read by Rev. Martin P. Luther, Churchville, who was highly commended by Dr. Van Dyke.
"Evidently," commented the chairman, "you were educated in a school where they taught you to read. There is no reason why the gospel should be drowned or snuffed as it is too often. Education, after all, should teach us to think clearly, love cleanly, will strongly and act nobly."
Another address of the afternoon was made by Rev. Freeman H. Hart, of the department of history, Hampden Sidney College, who substituted for President J. D. Eggleston, LL. D.

Selections, including several Negro spirituals, were sung by a quartet from Lincoln University.

Leaving the Neshaminy of Warwick Presbyterian Church, the audience went to the site of the monument about a mile away, where H. S. Borneman, of Phila., made a statement on behalf of the Presbyterian Historical Society. Included in his remarks were paragraphs from a book published in 1845 suggesting the erection of such a monument and a comment made by the late Rev. J. B. Krewson, of Forest Grove, years ago, urging the purchase of the site which is within the acre occupied by the college, high above the roadway so that the monument is readily seen.

Miss Tennent was then introduced, after Boy Scouts had sounded the bugle calls, flanked by the national and church flags, and pulled the cord which unveiled the monument. Miss Tennent was introduced by Dr. W. C. Covert, Philadelphia.

The prayer of dedication was offered by Dr. C. R. Erdman.

Interpretations of the college tablets were given by President B. H. Kroeze, Jamestown College, N. D., and H. H. Sweet, D. D., secretary of the educational committee of the Presbyterian Church, U. S.

The benediction was pronounced by Rev. Mr. Neff, pastor of the Old Tennent Church, near Freehold, N. J., where Gilbert Tennent preached, and in which the two rear seats still show signs of the blood of Revolutionary soldiers wounded at the battle of Monmouth.

Talks given were as follows: "The Contribution of Pioneer Women to Christian Education," President E. D. Warfield, D. D., LL. D., Wilson College, Chambersburg, Pa.; "The Place in the Church Today for the Educated Christian Women," President S. C. Byrd, D. D., Chicora College for Women.

Columbia, S. C.: "What Women of the Southern Presbyterian Church Are Doing for Christian Education," Mrs. W. C. Winsborough, Committee of Education, Presbyterian Church, U. S.; "The Responsibility of Presbyterian Women for Christian Education," Mrs. L. M. Coy, chairman Women's Committee, Board of Christian Education, Presbyterian Church, U. S.

In the evening an anniversary, or fellowship dinner, was held in the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel, Phila., including representatives of the Presbyterian Educational Work of the Northern and Southern Presbyterian Churches.

Dr. Hugh Thompson Kerr, Pittsburgh, presided. Speakers were as follows: "The Life of a Christian College," President C. F. Wishart, College of Wooster, Ohio; "The Aim We Share in Educational Work," Dr. W. J. Martin, president of Davidson College, N. C.; "Education and Womanhood,"

Dean Alice Hill Byrne, Western College for Women, Oxford, Ohio; "Responsibilities of Educated Men," Dr. William Mather Lewis, president of Lafayette College, Easton.
